A horse ran away from the Blue Ridge depot the other morning and came near going into the cut across Main street, owing to the fence between the foot and wagon bridges being down. The railroad authorities had better take our advice and have this matter attended to. The town was without corn or meal for several days last week. If this condition of affairs had have continued long it would have been about as bad for the country people as for those of the town. It used to be that the country supplied the town with corn, meal, etc., but now the town supplies the country.

We would direct attention to the advertisement of the Williamston Male Academy, which appears elsewhere in this issue. Mr. W. W. We are requested by the citizens of Piercetown and surrounding country to announce that James Mullikin, Esq., one of the oldest and most respected citizens of our County, will deliver an address on the subject of whiskey legislation on the 16th day of July, at 2 o'clock p. m., at Piercetown. The public generally, and the members of the Legislature particularly, are invited to attend.

We heard a gentleman say the other day that he was a candidate for the Legislature next year, and his only object in being elected was to introduce a bill abolishing corn-cribs and smoke-houses. They were almost entire useless, and the people should be relieved of the expense of building them. He says he is certain of election if all the people with empty corn-cribs vote for him.

The pic nic of the German Club of Anderson on last Thursday was a very successful and pleasant affair. The selection of Andersonville, with its beautiful rivers and scenery, as the location for the gathering was altogether fortunate, as the sports of fishing and rowing afforded an agreeable interlude to the dancing and conversation to which the day raight otherwise have been limited. A large number of ladies and gentlemen attended and spent a most charming day.

Voluntarily to submit to such a system is unnatural. But where poverty demands it, maternal affection must yield. Such a system can never prevail in as factoring sections or in sparsely settled communities, but doubtless is admirably adapted to manufacturing centres. The Gradel Schools, so far as I have been able to investigate them, are no improvement upon that school where you and I. Mr. President, received our academic education. And a majority of the Agricultural Colleges in the United States teach the students everything but agriculture. Hence, I repeat, the present systems of education have changed but little from what they were years ago. At the tender age of six, or perhaps seven, (three years too soon in my opinion) the child has been taught the alphabet at home, and is then sent to school first, perhaps, to learn to spell monosyllables, then to connect two or more of these together and spell words, then to read, and on to memorizing and repeating the multiplication table, to making fine and coarse strokes with a pen, and uitimately to acquiring a smattering of history, to writing a fair hand, to understanding vulgar fractions, or perhaps to calculating the interest on a note, and showing that the book says, what he does not comprehend, that verbs are of three kinds, active, passive and neuter.

And with these acquirements ends the scholastic coarse of most of our yearshe plano dramming. But even of those who as school seem to have mestered the scicince, how many of them utilize their accomplishment beyond making themselves agreeable and entertaining until they are marriageable? That I may not be accused of judging too critically, took over the catalogues of our Southern female seminaries and sea how frequently the musical department is in the hands of Professor So-end-So, with a long pame either from Germany or France or some other foreign country, and not under the control of graduates of the institution.

the control of graduates of the institution.

So with drawing, painting, wax work, making artificial flowers. These arts are frequently taught in our seminaries, but where will you find a young lady in the State or the South who has made a profession of either of them? I would have the young lady, who had a peculiar talent for any of these area, study it, master it, and ply it as her vocation in after life.
Who cer yould me to a Southern female artist of any cerbrity either as a painter, street, but of the extractional type of the control In 1874 I was so circumstanced that I could give employment to a half dozen or more young ladies in making artificial flowers. I wrote to friends in almost every Southern city, enquiring whether this demand could be supplied there. I failed to secure a single one in all the South, but had no difficulty in engaging them at th. North.

Now, In 1st 1:0t be understood as advocating the policy of woman's receiving a higher education simply that she may become a professional character. Not at all. But I do believe in encouraging every one to utilize the taints with which they are endowed. And to this end I c nsider it the duty of parents to educate their daughters as thorough!, as their sons, and wherever any peculiar or superior talent is discovered, it should be fostered, encouraged and disciplined to its utmost capacity. Not otherwise can success in any vocation be attained now-a-days. V. e live in a mechanical, inventive, progressive age, and every-where and at all times skill is recognized.

The aphorism is accorded to Aristotle, that "in every block of marble there is a statue: it only needs the chisel of the sculptor to fashion it." What sculpture is 7 to the marble, education is to the mind. Who then can tell us how many intellectual statues of great beauty lie forever concealed within the recesses of the unsculptured minds of our country? Hence the importence, my young friends, of your striving to perfect your education; and in doing so cultivate virtuous and lofty aspirations. There is always a possibility of success for those who deserve it, and ambition tempered by the intuitive nobleness of wonan is not a dangerous, but one of the most admirable attributes of man. Properly restrained it has developed great and good men, and stimulated them to the performance of labors of surpassing grandeur. It will do no less for woman, when controlled by aer fortitude and ameliorated by her patience. Let then your aspirations be lofty, and your ambition virtuous and ennobling. But, Mr. President, in the acquisition of knewledge, pedantry should at all times be avoided. There is nothing attractive in a blue stocking. That is a contracted intellect, which is constantly parading its acquirements. Those who by reading and study have stored their minds with a fund of information, which they can only utilize by myking a display of what they have absorbed from others, may be called learned, but they are never wise.

My auditory must see that the drift of my whole argument is its encourage the practical utilization of acquired knowledge. To this end I would encourage, even at school, the introduction of some of the duties of after life, believing that any one who studies five years and practices five will acquire more and be better educated than he who studies ten years. Practical utilization of the intellect, the refinement of reason, guided by good taste and not pedantry, so that however schools may

As with men, so with women. If a pure, refined educated woman is the lovellest of nature's creations, she becomes no less toyely because she can be seed dough, labor at the ironing table, or even bend over the wash tub. One of the most attractive persons I ever met was a young lady of Anderson county, who, after attending to her daily routine of housekeeping, was said to mount her horse, visit the farm hands in the field and give general direction as to the made of cultivating the crops.

What verdict, think you, would be rendered by the young men of our country were they consulted as to the attractiveness of those young ladies who did and those who did not supplement their education with these various practical accomplishments? To those already mentioned, I might aid the use of the sewing machine, and a knowledge of type sotting, telegraphy and stenegraphy. These 9 almost necessary adjuncts to a finished female education now a days. Every adolescent melden should anticipate some day becoming materfamilias, and as surely as the sparks fly unward will this dignified position be attended by all the perplicities of housekeeping. If these are to be surmounted by experience, how harrassing the life! But if they are anticipated by education, the butten becomes allevisted, and the dity of them a pleasure.

Raview the lives of your acquaintances who have preceded you here or elsewhere at school during the past three or five years. Some of them are single, others married. Of the latter how many of them are wedded to men capable of providing them home! I comfortable as the paternal roofs they left, or able to supply all the servants necessary to relieve their wives of the disagreeable drudgery of housekeeping? Then profit by these examples, and learn practically to perform those duties which are so inevitably connected with woman's life as is heat with the summer's on.
